"Knight and I never get tired." Yes, I will tell you the story. Throw few more logs into the stove, will you? Cold out doors?

"Cold? I suppose so; thermometer below, but I'm blest if I feel it much. Your mountain air is wonderful to me. Been living on it ever since I came west." Oh, we soon get used to it, and then our only wonder is how we ever con-sented to live where the deadly damp and chill is like a chronic agne. No more of it for me. The valley states have their good features, of course— orchards and corn fields and all that good to look at when there are no mountains in sight; but of what use would they be here? Plenty of fruit to be had f you want it. Gad, how I used to work when I was a kid! Wading through the black soil of Illinois, dropping corn as soon as I shed my dresses; then covered and hosd and plowed and husked until I got disgusted, cut the whole business and lit out. Wasn't cut out for a king of the soil, Sleep as long as you please, dress as you please, eat when you are hungry and work when the fit comes on. Happy man!"

That's all right, Jim-for me. You would loathe yourself in a week, if you should try it. Don't quarrel with your destiny. You are a man of action-your place is in the world. I am a dreamer, a mixer of paints and—a failure.

I had been here about six weeks and had made a good many studies, which I meant to finish up when I returned to the cast. I was in earnest and ambitious then, and had my dreams of fame and my hopes of the future as other men have, I suppose. I had seen no one with the exception of a few prospectors on the hunt for gold and silver. They minded their own business, as men soon learned to do in those days, and I was not bothered nor my privacy intruded upon. But one day as I sat busily painting I heard a step, a soft rustle looked up to see a vision in my door-way. A young girl, but little more than 15 years of age, stood there with her hand resting upon the head of a great mastiff dog. The sight was so unex-pected that for a moment I thought of optical illusions and rubbed my eyes, expecting the picture to vanish; but instead, it advanced, and the dog came and poked his cold nose into my hand, asking, after the manner of his kind, for notice and carcases. As for his mistress. she stood looking about her as a child might have done, and indeed she was

SUNRISE. BY ROSE HARTWICK THORPE.

Silence profound; then faintly
Low throbbings in the air,
A presence holy, saintly;
Hushed voices breathing prayer.
A wavering light uncertain,

A wavering light uncertain,
A soft glow spreading wide,
A dusky, somber curtain
Drawn silently aside.
Pale rays of rare completeness
Far down the sky's dim lawn,
Moist lips of rosy sweetness
Upraised to kiss the dawn.
A sudden burst of rapture
From bird-throats swelling long,
Which echo elves recapture,
And flood the earth with song.
A richer color showing
A flush across the gray.

A richer color showing
A flush across the gray,
A deeper carmine glowing,
Night shadows rolled away.
A gleam of polished silver,
A glow of burnished gold,
A liquid mass of splendor,
A glory manifold,
A royal car superanded

A royal car suspended,
Hung swaying in the blue.
The grand coronation's ended,
And rose tints fade from view

Oh, human heart, grown tender,
With thought beyond all speec
This sunrise scene of splender
No human art can reach;
Revives hope's blessed story,
Bids faith ascend on high,
And view eternal glory
Where rose tints never die.
